• Labor Troubles.

The Philadelphia Times says: In various sections of the country labor demonstrations of a less peaceful character are reported. At Omaha railroad men are in revolt; at Pittsburg iron workers have resorted to violence in order to enforce their demands, and in the Cumberland coal region of Maryland pit hands to the number of three thousand are on a strike and serious apprehensions of disorder are constantly felt in the neighborhood. In Massachusetts the spinners have added to the general anxiety by refusing to accept a proposed reduction in wages, and there is a fear that preparations are in progress to inaugurate a strike throughout the anthracite coal regions of this State.

These tales have ominous sound of distress, and there many who construe them to forecast a great crisis in the near future. During the winter which has just closed, while nature tempered the winds of the poor, the prices of life's necessities have been unusually burdensome. Industrial enterprise has been active in all departments and prosperity seemed to be the harvest of industrial application. Enhanced values have consumed the fruits of labor, and the changing season fails to show an expected accumulation. This has been productive of discontent, which invites agitation, and that in turn provokes outbreaks. The improvement in business that the recent past promised has not been realized and disappointed operators have been inclined to apply the usual remedy—reducing wages. For this the labor element is poorly equipped and ripe for resistance by any means that offers. Strikes and labor agitation are the result, and whether they will be confined to their present proportions or spread until the whole country is enveloped is the problem of the future.

In whatever aspect the situation is viewed it is sufficiently grave to admonish all concerned that the best and speediest remedy should be invoked. The suffering by strikes must fall with equal force upon both the employer and employe, and if the impending difficulty can be solved by the logic of reason he violates a plain duty who fails in an endeavor to apply it.

The Republicans of New York are now divided into three factions Stalwarts, Half Breeds and Tammanyites.

There is an unconfirmed rumor that charges against Judge Blatchford have been preferred before the Judiciary Committee.

The country would be gratified to learn the names of the Congressmen who have presented bills for their expenses incurred in attending the funeral of President Garfield.

By an act of the Legislature it is proposed to make an allowance of $738 to the Sheriff and Clerk of Boyd county for extraordinary services in the Ashland murder trial. The appropriation has already been authorized by the House.

RHODE ISLAND will lead off next month in the State elections of this year. Oregon will follow in June. Kentucky comes next in August, together with Tennessee and Alabama. Maine elects a Governor and Legislature in September. Ohio and Iowa will fill minor offices in October and Colorado and West Virginia will elect Governors and Legislatures. In November, Connecticut, Delaware, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas and New York will elect Governors, and Illinois will elect a Legislature.

The Jeannette.

Melville's report of the Jeannette search has reached the State department, and in substance is as follows:

DeLong's instructions, dated Cape Emma Bennett Island, August 5, 1881, were that the party should go south to Magnetec if over ice, and if in boats to the Siberian coast, and make for the mouth of the Lena. If the boats got separated the understanding was to go for the Lena and stream to the settlements. The boats separated on the night of September 12, 1881, fifty miles northeast of Bukin, and Melville reached Lena September 16 and Bukoff, September 26, and tried to get up the native guides, but ice and the exhausted condition of the men compelled a return. The natives gave them quarters and a quantity of fish and decayed geese. On October 8 a Russian exile discovered them and divided his food and went back and told the commandant.

On October 29, the exile returned with a supply of food, and said that the commandant would be at Kurkoff, November 1st with deer and sleds to rescue the party and take them to Belum. The exile on his return met two of the first cutter's party at Kurmart, and Melville at once started for Belum to intercept the commandant, but missed him by taking a different road, and leaving Deanhower, whose eyes had recovered, in charge of the party, with instructions to follow Melville to Belum as soon as possible.

Melville reached Belum November 2, and found the two men in an exhausted condition, and from them learned what had occurred after the separation up to October 1st. The latest anything was heard of DeLong was that DeLong's party crossed the Lena to the west bank October 1st to a summer hunting lodge called Usterda.

The toes of Erickson were amputated, because of being frozen, and he was drawn on an improvised sled and hauled by a companion who was hardly able to walk because of his frozen feet and legs. They proceeded south again, crossing the Lena, having to wade. Erickson died October 6, and was buried in the Lena. The party was then in a deplorable condition, having lost their dog meat and living on an allowance of three ounces of alcohol per man per day, but proceeded south till October 9th, when DeLong, sent Nirdeman and Neros, ahead to seek relief.

These two men, after fourteen days of terrible suffering, reached Bulcoma, and were cared for by the commandant there. They sent a dispatch to the United States minister at St. Petersburg. The commandant afterward supplied Melville, Nov., 5th at Bauanlaup, at the Upper Belum. The natives gave Melville DeLong's records, left there by DeLong. Melville says, from all circumstances, he believes that DeLong and party are to the northward of the Lena, between Sister Aureek and Bulcour, and asks authority to organize search parties.
